DEEDS, NOT WORDS.

Barre People Have Absolute Proof of Deeds at Home.

It's not words but deeds that prove true merit.
The deeds of Doan's Kidney Pills. For Barre kidney sufferers, Have made their local reputation. Proof lies in the testimony of Barre people who have been cured to stay cured.

Mrs. Annie Gibb, 31 Brooklyn street, Barre, Vt., says: "I am just as strong in my praises of Doan's Kidney Pills today as when I recommended them several years ago. They cured me at that time and I am glad to say there has been no return of my old trouble. For over a year I had more or less backache, this being the result of disordered kidneys. If I brought any strain on the muscles of my back, sharp pains would seize me and I also suffered at times from headaches and dizzy spells. When I overworked or caught cold, my trouble was always more intense. I read a great deal about Doan's Kidney Pills and decided to try them, procured a box at E. A. Drown's drug store. Before I had finished the contents, the pains in my back were relieved and I felt better in every way."
For sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, New York, sole agents for the United States. Remember the name—Doan's—and take no other.

Mr. and Mrs. Chase returned from a wedding trip of a few days to Boston Thursday, and Friday evening a reception was given them by the groom's parents.

JUSTICE BREWER TO SPEAK.

Eminent Jurist Will Attend Fish and Game League Banquet.
Burlington, Sept. 14.—It is now expected that Hon. David J. Brewer, associate justice of the United States supreme court, will attend the banquet of the Vermont Fish and Game League Friday at Hight Point, N. Y., and take part in the postprandial exercises. The securing of Justice Brewer as one of the speakers will add materially to the enjoyable features of the meeting. He is at present at his summer home at Thompson's Point.

It is also learned that Hon. Joseph G. Cannon, speaker of the House of Representatives, will not be able to attend the banquet.

GENERAL LEE.

His Personal Influence and His Military Prowess.

In looking for the source of Lee's personal influence we have to go back, I think, to the habit of inherited respect which the people of the south paid to social position. It was not born of a feeling of subservience, however, for the poorest "cracker" had an unmistakable and self-conscious dignity about him. He always walked up to and faced the highest with an air of equality. No, this latent respect was a natural response on the part of men of low estate to good manners and oft displayed sympathy. Lee by his connection through birth and marriage with the most distinguished and best families of Virginia represented the superior class. Moreover, that he was a Lee of Virginia and by marriage the head of the Washington family had from one end of the south to the other a weight which the present commercial, mammoth worshiping age knows or cares but little about.

Again, Nature in one of her moods had made him the balanced product in manners and looks of the well bred and aristocratic traditions of the gentleman transmitted and ingrained at an early age through the cavaliers into Virginia life. But for his military prowess he had something vastly more efficacious than ancestry or flitting the mold of well bred traditions. He had the generative quality of simple, effective greatness—in other words, an unspotted, serenely lofty character whose qualities were reactive, reaching every private soldier and making him unconsciously braver and better as a man.—Murder Subject in Atlantic.

MADAGASCAR SPIDERS.

Their Wonderful Webs and an Experiment in Weaving.

"It is interesting to know the practical uses to which the webs of a large Madagascar spider might be applied to replace silk for woven fabrics," said Fisher S. Williams of London, who is interested in the manufacture of silk.

"I know from visits to the interior of Madagascar that the webs spun many feet across the walks or shady avenues of gardens are sufficiently strong to hang thereon a light bamboo walking cane. At the Paris exposition of 1900 a whole piece of fabric eighteen yards long and eighteen inches wide was exhibited which was woven out of this web, for which it was necessary to provide 100,000 yards of spun thread of twenty-four strands.

"For its manufacture 25,000 spiders had to be brought into requisition, and these were procured by offering the natives so much a hundred; but, not knowing or ignoring the purpose for which the insects were required and having a get-rich-quick desire, they brought them in by basketsful, mostly dead. It was found necessary for the winding of machines to go to the spiders alive, calling in the spiders to the factories. However, the piece of cloth was completed and was of a shimmering golden yellow color.

"The idea of obtaining silk from the spider is an old one, as distinguished men in France discoursed on the subject as long ago as 1710, but the first study of this Madagascar spider came up some ten years ago, and the spinning of its web was then undertaken. It is only the female that spins. The first difficulty in obtaining the thread direct from the insect consisted in contriving how to secure the living spider so as to wind it off by some mechanical process from the insect. This was originally performed by confining spiders in empty matchboxes, with the abdomen protruding. The extraction of the web does not apparently inconvenience the insect, although care has to be taken not to injure it."—Washington Herald.

Some College Spelling.

No one can blame the colleges of this country if they demand as one of the requirements of admission the ability on the part of the student correctly to spell words with which he would expect his thoughts. Essays submitted by 250 students contained an average of five mistakes to each pupil. Nearly fifty men made the mistake of placing an unnecessary "e" at the end of a syllable, as "departement," "developement." A very common error was to transpose the vowels "el" and "le." "Believe" and "receive" were the words most misused. "Preceding" and "succeeding" offered difficulties to many, while "offered" and "preferred" proved troublesome. Why "principal" and "principle" should so often be incorrectly used by college students is a mystery. There are a few simple rules for spelling which should have been presented at least half of the mistakes. Before the age of fourteen these rules should be part of the educational outfit of the student in the grammar schools.—Professor W. B. Bailey of Yale in New York Independent.

A Crooked Parallel.

It was decreed by the convention of 1815 and the treaty of Washington of 1846 that the boundary between the United States and Canada from the Lake of the Woods to the Pacific, a distance of 1,270 miles, should follow the forty-ninth parallel. The surveyors who have lately completed the location of the boundary have found that the astronomical parallel varies from a direct circle around the earth, and Professor Otto Klotz explains the curious fact that the line, instead of being straight, is at one point 900 feet south of the direct circle and at another place 600 feet north. It was decided that the astronomical parallel, or line through places where the pole is 41 degrees from the zenith, should be the accepted boundary. This decision was followed, but local attraction in some places deflected the plumb line, and therefore the zenith and the astronomical forty-ninth parallel proves to be a quite irregular line.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

The London Police.

The London policeman, aside from the matter of pay, has every advantage over his New York contemporary. He is looked up to with respect. His slightest command is obeyed in the public streets. He takes himself very seriously and is grave and solemn under the weight of his responsibility. I never saw a London policeman laugh or even smile, except in one instance, and he was an Irishman and possibly might be considered too human for his office. His relation to the people is entirely different from that of the New York policeman. The greatest power over him is that of parliament, and all political parties are friendly to him. He is occasionally investigated by royal commissions, which investigation is impartial and, if anything, friendly to him. It is their hope to find everything as it should be.—William McAdoo in Century.

LADY EDINA'S GUEST

"Very awkward, very awkward!" ejaculated the editor of that popular weekly magazine, the London World, as he burst into Paul Willoughby's room with a telegram in his hand.

"What's the matter now?" asked Willoughby.

"Matter!" cried the editor, tramping up and down the room. "Miss Bertram's ill. Unable to work—doctor's orders. No 'woman's page' from day tomorrow. Confound it all! That's what's the matter!"

"Can't you find a woman who can do a page at a moment's notice?"

"No use. No time to go hunting round. Have an idea. You try your hand. Pen of ready writer. Ah! All women's papers in Miss Bertram's room. Easily knock something together."

Willoughby went up to Miss Bertram's room and sat down at her table. The first thing he did was to glance through a few back numbers to see what was required of him.

"Not so difficult after all," he muttered. "Three columns of stuff and a couple of columns of answers to correspondents."

He got his facts from the women's papers lying on the table and in a couple of hours had produced quite a tolerable article in the approved first person style. Miss Bertram called herself Lady Edina and moved in very select circles indeed. Willoughby kept up the fiction admirably.

"Now for the correspondence. This will be more ticklish, I am afraid."

There was a trayful of letters, and he settled down to go steadily through them, but without the slightest intention of treating them with the seriousness they met with at the hands of Lady Edina. The first was from a gushing damsel and contained half a dozen pages of figurative about a garden party.

At length he came to a dainty pink envelope inscribed in a dainty hand and exhaling a dainty perfume. He twirled it in his fingers for some moments before opening it. His imagination wandered in the realms of fancy, conjuring up pictures of the fair correspondent. He experienced quite a strong desire to know what she had to say, but was half afraid to tear open the envelope lest the charm be broken.

"This won't do. Here goes!" He opened the letter and ran his eye over its contents:

Dearest Lady Edina—I really cannot stand it any longer, so, in spite of your advice, I am going to run away from home tomorrow. I must go on the stage, although, I will surely die when you know it. But she ought to be more sympathetic. You know, you promised to meet me if I came up to town. I shall be at Euston at 2:15 tomorrow, and if you cannot be there I shall come on to the office. As we do not know each other by sight, please wear cornflowers and carnations, and I will do the same. Yours sincerely, MAY DARELY.

"Tomorrow!" mused Paul Willoughby. "Why, that is today." He whistled and looked at his watch. "Oh, plenty of time! As I am Lady Edina, I suppose I must go and meet her. This is growing interesting."

He set to work and dashed off another column of answers to correspondents and then took his "copy" to the editor, who glanced through it approvingly.

"Ha, this'll do! Knew you were the man. Leave it there. Fearfully busy."

Willoughby went out and bought a buttonhole of cornflowers and carnations, and after a general brush up he felt quite satisfied with himself. He took a hansom and arrived at Euston with a quarter of an hour to spare. After what seemed ages of waiting the heavy express from the north steamed in, and Willoughby felt positively nervous as he watched the passengers alight. His quick eye caught sight of a beautiful girl with a brave show of red and blue flowers in her dress. She looked round eagerly, as though expecting some one. His heart beat quicker than usual as he stepped up to her and raised his hat. She stared blankly at him, but he quietly pointed to the flowers in the buttonhole of his frock coat.

"You are Miss May Darely, I presume?"

"Yes, but?"

"I am Lady Edina," he replied, with a smile.

"You Lady Edina!" she cried, blushing. "And you have read all my letters?"

"No—only your last one. Let me explain. The real Lady Edina is ill, and I had to do her work at a moment's notice. I didn't see your letter until a couple of hours ago, and then it was too late to wire to you. But where is a porter? You had better leave your luggage here until we see what is to be done. You will pardon me, but I should suggest a bit of lunch somewhere, and then we can talk matters over."

"With a gentleman whom I do not know?"

"With Lady Edina," gravely replied Willoughby.

The girl laughed and finally consented.

They drove to a quiet restaurant in the Strand, and over their cutlets and green peas they became quite confidential.

He talked to such good purpose that she returned home by the 7 p. m. train resolved never to attempt such an escapade again, but quite as firm in her resolve to become an actress, to which end he offered his services and influence.

Paul Willoughby is now editor and part proprietor of the London World, and Mrs. Willoughby is known to all playgoers as May Darely, that most charming of our "sympathetic" actresses.—London Sun.

Our Shaping.
"Chance shapes our destinies," quoted the wise guy.

"Well, all I have to say is that some of us have mighty poor shapes," added the simple mug.—Philadelphia Record.

Rastus Goes Fishing.

Mr. Henry—"Going fishing on washday, Rastus? I thought Melissa needed you to gather wood and make a fire to boil the clothes."

Rastus—"Yes, sah, Marse Henry. But Anty Drudge here, she done sho'd M'Lissy how to wash de clo's without no fish an' M'Lissy she say hit's as easy as rollin' off a log."

Anty Drudge—"That's right, Mr. Henry. Rastus had better be working than fishing, but Melissa doesn't need him. Fels-Naptha makes the biggest washing easy for one person in less time than the old way."

Do your washing without a fire next time. Save the bother, the discomfort and the cost of fuel.

Wash your clothes with Fels-Naptha in cool or lukewarm water, in summer or winter.

It's much easier—no hard rubbing is needed.

It saves the clothes because there's no boiling to weaken them and no hard rubbing to wear them out.

It takes less than half the time of the old way.

And this Fels-Naptha way of washing in cool or lukewarm water makes your clothes cleaner, sweeter, and fresher than if you boiled and hard-rubbed 'em till Doomsday.

Don't take a substitute for Fels-Naptha because it will not do the work.

Look for the red and green wrapper and follow the directions printed on the back.

The Kettledrum in Music.
In a lecture delivered at the Royal Society of Arts by Gabriel Cleather on the "Musical Aspect of Drums" it was contended that the kettledrum was one of the few perfect instruments in the orchestra, owing to the exactness of its scale. The kettledrum, he contended, was perfectly competent to produce atmosphere as well as rhythm. Even to tune the instrument three things were required—a perfect musical ear, a fine sense of touch and five years' experience. After playing over a kettledrum melody, written eighty years ago, from Meyerbeer's

"Robert le Diable," Mr. Cleather continued. "I venture to say that, outside the musical profession, not one person in a hundred of those who listen to an orchestra in England today knows that tympani have notes and can give out a melody." No instrument, he added, had a greater range of power than the kettledrum, for none could be played more softly, and none had greater penetrating power.—Dundee Advertiser.

He Spouts.
"He is a fountain of information."
"Fountain?" More like an artesian well.—Philadelphia North American.
